TEACHING ARCHITECTURE

Over the past five years several European universities have collaborated on five joint design projects focusing on different regions and cities in Europe. Each project was introduced by one of the contributing universities using the format of a symposium. The hosting university gave intensive insights both into the architectural programme and the architectural characteristics of a specific place. Each school was afforded the opportunity of contributing by delineating its design attitude and methods. Exhibitions and publications followed.

The Bauhaus-Universität Weimar will show some of the best student projects thereby reflecting on architectural teaching and collaborative projects.

In times of waning cultural differences and increasing global similarities we will ask to what extent architectural teaching and design are driven by attitude, method and an understanding of place.
