9th International Model Project Forum

In a time, where the real estate market is burdened like never experienced throughout the last decades, visions for our urban environment are nevertheless needed to deal with nowadays problems and demands in our cities. Is a shift needed towards a new paradigm in the urbanist practice? While it is too early to give an answer on how this shift takes place, the discussion of current projects may help to formulate that urbanist practice. What kind of questions arise with the real estate crisis concerning new plans? What is the priority behind new projects? What is the chance and visionary craft of today's projects for tomorrow's city? And what are the requirements that urbanists articulate in their concepts?

Outstanding practice partners from the private sector, administration and applied sciences, as well as post-graduate students of the master-programmes "European Urban Studies" and "Integrated Urban Studies" present their experience in the practice of urbanism. They are covering interdisciplinary projects from Bulgaria, Great Britain, India, Ireland, the Lebanon, the Netherlands, the United States of America and Germany. The scope ranges from coastal zone management to transit oriented development as well as from community planning to questions of high rise development. The conference presents projects that offer a look from the detailed analysis to the large conceptual plan for neighbourhoods, cities and regions and offers professional exchange and impulses on a variety of topics in urbanism.
