URBAN DESIGN | RESILIENCE

XII. International Model Project Forum European Urban Studies

Derived from current fields of attentions that gravitate today's world of urbanism, the XII. International Model Project Forum outlines projects and topics where students of the Master's Course "European Urban Studies" were involved in the summer semester 2011 at international Model Project Partners. Permitting our students to develop own skills and talents based on their previous studies and experiences, the Model Projects European Urban Studies bear the option to deepen the self-understanding and to find orientation in the broad field of urbanism.

Being inspired by the different creative environments of our international Model Project Partners our students get the possibility not only to take an active role and develop interdisciplinary skills with professionals but also to reflect that role definition and to develop one more step in their own urban commitment. The Model Project Forum gives a platform to reflect all these different aspects that form our urban realm and to critically think over gaps between practice and theory. Derived from their experience, we discover two main fields that occupy their concerns within this forum.

While last year's conference Changing Urban Images: Planning and Developing Strategies from Neighbourhood to City Scale (16.-18.02.2011) offered different perspectives on participatory instruments and methods, this year's forum relies to common urban design questions and the question how a city can respond to peak oil and climate change. It becomes obvious that ambitious goals for a 'better city' are manifold and that they require many singular steps to transform today's common planning postulates.
