The given image is the new icon for android wear in the latest marshmallow update. The icon is constructed by 3 cards on a background circle. Android uses cards as the default container for displaying data to the user, but not all the users might be familiar with google's standard format for displaying content. Also if the icon is viewed without any description below it, it becomes ambiguous. Since the meaning of the pictorial representation is not clear , the user might not get the idea that it represents the smartwatch connected to the device. I have designed the suggested icon to make the it simple as well as it carries the idea that it represents the smart watch connected to the device. So the even if there is no description under the icon, the idea still carries over.
